

There is peace in Bangkok, for the moment. It seems the only time that there is peace here is when there is no real government in place. Tomorrow (Monday) the parliament is holding their election of a new Prime Minister. Regardless of the result, there will be ongoing protests. We are grateful that we live under the shadow of the Prince of Peace who gives peace in spite of circumstances. Please continue to pray for the people of Thailand and their King.

This coming week Tim will be speaking to a Discipleship Training School (DTS) from Hawaii, and then again on January 2-5 will be speaking in northern Thailand to a DTS for Laotians. Please remember the preparations and the actual teaching times for those two schools in prayer.

Our family is doing well, and enjoying the Christmas season. Ethan is quite an expert on Christmas songs, and has helped to create and hang many of our Christmas decorations. Lydia likes to try and help, too; but enjoys the Christmas sweets best of all.

We have all enjoyed having Rhys here, and will be sorry when he leaves next week to return to England. Right now, he is in southern Thailand serving with Radt for a couple of days. What blessing, encouragement, and joy he has brought wherever he has gone over the past few weeks! Thank you for keeping all of us in prayer.
